Fund Manager's Comment, June 2017

Global bond markets were weak in June as European investment grade bonds and CPI-linkers lost 0.2-0.5% while high yield bonds managed to post +0.2% performance. Emerging Market Bond Index posted -0.2% return in $ terms (-1.8% in €). In the FX market the dollar continued to lose ground against the euro (-1.6%). In Q2 the greenback dropped 6.7% vs. the euro. Softer economic data, delays in implementation of tax reforms and infrastructure spending in the US, and relative economic improvement in the Eurozone have caused a shift in the respective interest rate expectations. Eastern European currencies were mixed in June. Notable downward move took place in the Russian rouble that weakened 5.4% amid the 4.8% drop in crude price.

Avaron Eastern Europe Fixed Income Fund was flat in June. As of end-June the Fund's bond portfolio had a weighted average maturity of 4.5 years without perpetuals with YTM at 5.0% and YTW at 4.6%.
